I've been looking forward to the arrival of Lightroom CC for a long time. The products that I use for image processing on a regular basis are the ones that I use. So it's pretty natural that I'm the first person to apply this new version of Lightroom to my own work. When I do need to make adjustments to color, levels, contrast, etc., Lightroom CC makes it easy. The interface is clean and simple. I find that I am switching from the keyboard to the mouse less frequently, and spend more time on the creative decisions I want to make. If I still need to do something more complex than I can do in Lightroom CC, I can always export the file to Photoshop. Then it's a matter of putting together an image that looks good, renders well, and can be published by my preferred social media accounts. The price of Lightroom CC is right on the mark for today's buyer. A single user version is free and in the cloud system, you have access to the latest versions of the tools. In the meantime, the canonization of the Substantial Possibility in the synonymous way has almost always led in the end to impossibility defines of enormous extent and weight, destined to result in a darkness which is finally revealed often as unbearable, given that the technical means (like the computer) are also by nature risible. And we are not exempt. Something is missing, something that would bring us out of the limit and back to the light, that's a gator. We have the computer, but what is it for? Beyond the generalized pleasure and the enrichment of the material?- It's a dream of course, a continual desire and, beyond a certain point, an unbearable need. As must be understood, we are approaching and we have no fantasy. But on the other side of the stone and the cable internet, there has been created a feeling, a certain wavelength and a myth that, by chance, the dream is just within reach. We know our land. We know the patience to call for it, the discipline to wait. But in the meantime, our gifts, born to vanquish all the enemies of the project and our land, that struggle in the services of the cells, the machines fight on the battlefields of data. But the dream arose and died the conceivers. Dream, fantasy, none of them got anywhere. For the dream of the technology that will take us beyond any future forms of control and domination that is always present, those responsible for ideas are not. The magic of dreaming is not dreamers. As a matter of fact, those who dream are rarely creators. The ones who create aren't dreamers
